
Postmaster Appointment Records & NARA

Like all our history projects this project is part of a program in which the Hugo Neighborhood aims to promote the social welfare of its Hugo and county neighbors by working to preserve, protect, and enhance their rural livability through recording their rich community history.

Postal records prior to 1971 are kept at the National Archives and Records Administration. Two of the records most useful to postal historians, postmaster appointment records and post office site location reports, are preserved on microfilm.

The primary source for information on post offices and postmasters in western United States is Microfilm Publication M841, Record of Appointment of Postmasters, 1832-September 30, 1971. This record shows the names of post offices, the dates of their establishment and discontinuance, name changes, and names and appointment dates of postmasters.

Site location reports typically show the location of post offices relative to other post offices, transportation routes, and facilities; some include small grid maps. The series has been reproduced in Microfilm Publication M1126, Post Office Department Reports of Site Locations, 1837-1950.

Historically, there were six post offices in the Hugo, Oregon region; none remain today.

More Information

We are involved because we believe the quality of rural life in Hugo and Josephine County is enhanced through citizen knowledge of its history and the sense of community that a historical perspective facilitates.

The first Hugo Post Office building was a simple affair located within 30 feet of the Southern Pacific Railroad (middle right structure in photograph).

From 1782 to 1837, the U. S. Postal Service used the Roman god Mercury as its symbol. This was replaced in 1837 with a running pony, which was itself superceded by an eagle in 1970. In the 1990s, the eagle was redesigned again so that it was just the head
